I got these to help my daughter see visually where the notes are. They stick really well and the peel off nicely too without residue. Not sure yet about the fading of print as I just got it, but I will update this post if anything changes. I placed the stickers as high up the key as I can and when my daughter (8yrs old) plays, her fingers don't really touch them. When I play, even when my fingers rest on them, I don't really feel that it's there. I think it's great for people who are just starting to get familiar with notes and their placement on the keys.

You can stick and remove and restick...i highly recommend it.

Used these on the starter keyboard we purchased for the kids. It helped in giving some confidence in playing when just starting to read the beginner music sheets.

These are hard to get off the original board they come on.. and they don't reapply very well. The edges are kind of sharp since the plastic of the stickers are thicker than I thought.. my 4yo piano student actually nicked her finger on one at one of her lessons when horsing around. :-)

Simply an adorable way to familiarize a child with the designation of each note, to facilitate the needed eye-hand coordination to learn how to read music. We have not had them for long, but I would assume that the stickers will not leave a gummy residue on the keys, once the child is confident enough to play without them. As key surfaces must be plastic now, to save our elephants, I am sure any residue can be easily removed with a damp cloth.

My daughter is learning to play the piano and these visual cues are helpful so she can have proper finger placement.

These were purchased for my great grand daughter to use while she was visiting from Hawaii. Time got away from us but when she moves back, I'm sure they can still be used. Meantime, I'll use them to brush up on the left hand note reading.

I bought this for my son who just started studying piano. It comes with 6 sets of the 7 keys C,D,E,F,G, A,B. They can be reused and don't leave any sticky residue on the keys if you remove. We just used 1 sticker to label the middle C and didn't use the rest of them as I wanted my son to memorize the keys and not just look at them and play.
