Would A Worm Go On A Walk?

Synopsis

Would a worm go on a walk, if you could lead him down the street? / Would he wear his tiny tennies, if he had two worm-sized feet? So begins this humorous and imaginative picture book that introduces children to the idea that animals are uniquely created by a loving and wise God. Would a Worm Go on a Walk?, with its colorful, comical illustrations, is a fresh, fun way to teach young children that God created all things very good. He gave all the animals, and children, too, wonderful qualities and unique strengths. Children will giggle over the ridiculous scenarios presented, and they will come away with the knowledge that we all are loved and special. Ages 4-7.

Hannah C. Hall is the author of bestselling children's books, including God Bless You and Good Night, God Bless Our Christmas, and God Bless Our Fall, as well as an award-winning blog, HannahCHall.com. Hannah lives in Arkansas, with her husband, Josh, a worship pastor, and their four children.

The name of this book gives readers a clue that the contents are fun and colorful, and once you open the cover, you'll know you are right! This fun and colorful book helps children ages 3 to 8 learn about different animals and what they can and cannot do with whimsical rhymes. I knew my grandson, Dylan would LOVE this book, and I wasn't wrong! Would a Worm Go on a Walk? was a big hit and right on time for the Easter basket too! The author asks readers cute questions using "sing-song" rhymes about eight different animals such as "Would a worm go on a walk / if you could lead him down the street? / Would he wear his tiny tennies / if he had four worm-sized feet?" These questions remind kids in a fun way that no, worms don't have feet so they wouldn't be wearing sneakers. Written in bouncing rhymes, Would a Worm Go on a Walk? asks all sorts of silly questions: "Would a rhino wear a raincoat?"... "Would a turtle drive a truck if she had to get to town?"...and more. Each question is answered with an equally cute explanation. The illustrations inside this book are bright and beautiful and they are paired perfectly with the prose of the book. (Unfortunately, the pictures don't do them justice.) Children will learn how God created each of the animals in the story with their own unique strengths, differences, likes and dislikes, just how God intended. The last page of the book wraps everything up by providing children with the knowledge that they are all created perfectly as part of God's creation by saying "God's masterpiece is YOU!" ("God saw all that he had made, and it was very good." --Genesis 1:31a) Would a Worm Go on a Walk? has a great layout too. Each question is asked on one page, and then, since the young reader cannot see the answer to the question until the page is turned, they can make up their own answers. By keeping the answer hidden, it gives the parent (or teacher) time to discuss the question with the young reader before the answer is discovered. I was provided with a review copy of this book as a First Look Blogger for Worthy Publishing without cost in exchange for this, my honest review and unbiased opinion.

Cute story. Vibrant colors.

Such a cute book that makes the eyes of my boy light up with laughter as I read him the silly scenarios. Yes, we are all made perfect in the eyes of our Great Creator God!

Love , Love,Love!

Would a worm go on a walk, if you could lead him down the street? Would he wear his tiny tennies, if he had four worm-sized feet? Would a worm go on a walk? NO! No matter how he tries, worms weren't made for walking, and they don't like EXERCISE. These are the beginning lines of this humorous and imaginative picture book. With creative poetry, and the adorable illustrations by Bill Bolton, this sweet book will teach young children that animals are uniquely created by a loving and wise God. None of them are the same, and they are not like people, but God created them to be just the way they are. He also created people, which is His most special creation, to be just the way WE are. He loves all of His creations and, as it says in Genesis 1:31, "God saw all that he had made, and it was very good." This would be a fun addition to anyone's home library. I don't have young children anymore, but I read this book to my teen-aged special needs daughter, and she enjoyed it. She and I both smiled at the illustrations, and laughed at the silly lines. NOTE: I received a free copy from the publisher for review purposes.

What a priceless children's book! I'm so in love with the absolutely adorable animals, the rhymes, and the affirmation of God's purposeful and perfect creation. With no holds barred, I recommend that you find a copy at the library or from your favorite book vendor and enjoy this colorful, creative, Christian story with your favorite little one (or a brood of them). This would make a wonderful addition to your churches toddler's ministry. I received a review copy from the blogger review group First Look (Worthy Publishing) in exchange for my honest and unbiased review.
