Synopsis

The term 'body art' often conjures rude images of radical piercings and raunchy tattoos on modern primitives. Here artist Jean-Paul Bourdier applies his skills to a completely different task: to create haunting photographic images that allow viewers to see the environment from inside out by painting the bodies of models, thereby making them one with the desert landscape. In these photographs Bourdier eschews any digital altering, instead combining primal forms and materials with diverse textures to create exciting new interpretations of timeless nature and temporal body.

Customer Reviews

Photos are what a photography book is supposed to be about, Right? Well this book is great in that respect. First a nice large format, something you can see the details in. Second great printing on good quality paper, to allow the afore mentioned details to show up. Third a reasonable amount of text to help the viewer to understand the photographers vision if it is not apparent after looking through the first time. First quick look through this book conveys a feeling which calls for a second viewing with more time to soak up what has been done and the feeling it produces.

I bought this book years ago, but I STILL go back to it and look at it even now. It is a thoroughly captivating book of photography. I don't think I've looked through a book of photography over and over like this before or since. The photographs are fascinating, beautiful, and even humorous in a few of them. I highly recommend it to anyone interested in modern art or unique figure photography.

this collection of photographs, and the poetry that goes with them, is so moving. Definitely worth having. I immediately bought a second copy, and I am so sad that this book is no longer in print... ! Make more! I'd buy a third copy, if they're the original price!

The photography in this book really catches your attention. The colors, poses and visual illusions that the photographer creates really made an impression on me. And as a plus, mine came with a dvd that showed the photographer in action.

Jean Paul Bourdier has created a stunningly beautiful piece of art in this book of photos and essays taken on his several trips to the dessert. His 'eye' captures both the rich colors and the shifting contours of life. Do yourself a favor and get a copy of this beautifully done book.

The artist has painted friends' bodies and set them in natural environments, so that both the beauty of the body and the beauty of the world become apparent. The book is very reasonably priced and, with this production quality, one would expect to see it priced at $60, at least. There are not as many "interactive" couples as one sees on the cover, which I appreciated. I didn't see this as a book of erotic photography, unless one thinks that nude bodies are inherently erotic, but it does bring the viewer back to their senses. Obviously, this book is a labor of love by author and publisher. It makes a wonderful gift for people who enjoy art, photography, nature, the body -- and a LOT of color!

Jean-Paul Bourdier has created a one of kind masterpiece. The genius and creativity he exudes is unparalleled. The rich colors on the nude models, blend with light and earth to mesmerize your senses. His photos capture the whimsical, yet sharp reality of nature. The models are stunning, and very dedicated in their efforts to bend with the landscape. The tenacity to find these locations, color the bodies, with just the right light is just astounding. Book includes DVD, with behind the scenes footage.

Jean Paul Bourdier has created a masterpiece here ... I am just blown away by the work displayed in this book. Do yourself a favour and get one to meditate to and also to put out on your coffee table to share with friends.
