Customer Reviews

Still carrying the juggling skills she picked up from hippies at the Kuranda market as a 12-year-old, Jayne finally got the chance to return to the land of crocs, stingers and laid-back locals as a grown-up, and see who'd changed the most. When she's not discovering her own backyard and teaching her four-year-old how to read maps, Jayne writes on travel, design, the environment and homes for newspapers, magazines and her blog.

Overly focused on art galleries, fashion labels, and expensive restaurants. It's definitely not for the backpacker/glampacker crowd! Some suggested itineraries and more focus on interesting sights and activities would have improved it a lot. Giving 2 stars because it is fairly well-written, but the Lonely Planet label means it's aimed at the wrong crowd.
