“This tongue-in-cheek crash course includes a mini-textbook, 10 ‘Heroes of the Courtroom’™ trading cards, 10 ‘You Be the Judge’™ cards, a mini bar exam, and a faux diploma. Best of all, there’s no tuition!”
—Catholic Digest

John Cascarano and Jacquelyn O’Neill met in the spring semester, just outside the University of Michigan Law School reading room, where they probably should have been studying. Instead of cases, they found love. (Which is much better, in their unanimous professional legal opinion.) The couple, who got hitched soon after graduation, currently reside in Philadelphia, where they enjoy taking long walks around Rittenhouse Square with their ever-pooing wheaten terrier, Hamburger “Hammy” Cascarano.

I read the reviews and was intrigued by the fact that lawyers loved the game. I can see how a group of them could spend hours discussing each case, but if you're a layman then you don't have much to discuss. I highly recommend you get it for your lawyer friends.Â Law School in a Box

It is OK. Great gag gift and something to aspire to.

My son got a kick out of this! The little booklet that comes with it is very readable, and surprisingly educational!

This is very funny, the lawyer I know got a kick out of it. Good quality metal box, and the cards inside are thick and durable. The mock diploma is a little thin and flimsy, but overall and good quality novelty gift!

I bought this as a graduation gift for my nephew who s going to law school. I think it's a great little gift to give him along with money at graduation. I just found it tacky that the price is printed right n the tin can and can't be removed. Other than that, a great gift idea.

Bought this as a stocking stuffer for my software engineer son, because his sister is an attorney. Both my son and my dad were engrossed in reading the cards and interesting facts (who knew Byron White was drafted by the NFL?). When my attorney daughter got her hands on the kit later, she was impressed with it and commented that someone had spent quite of bit of time including the real cases that are enclosed. The enjoyment was well worth the purchase price.

Bought this as a gag gift for a burnt out Law Student, can't wait for her to open it! Definitely just a novelty item though, aka don't expect to get much use out of it past the first unboxing.

This was perfect for a good laugh for a friend going off to law school. It actually had some good information and made for a great little gift.
