Linda Howard's romantic suspense Kill and Tell supplies readers with plenty of thrills and chills. As a nurse, Karen Whitlaw has seen more than the average person, but even she isn't prepared to identify the body of the father she hasn't seen since she was 13. The local detective on the case, Marc Chastain, informs Karen that her father, who was homeless, has been murdered. Still grief stricken over the recent death of her mother, Karen isn't prepared to examine her feelings about her father and his absence from her life. She is willing to accept that he was the victim of street crime until her home is burglarized and she becomes the target for some frightening "accidents." Whoever killed her father is after her, and the only hope she has for discovering why must lie in the notebook that Karen's father mailed to her mother shortly before his death. --This text refers to an out of print or unavailable edition of this title.

Iris Johansen Author of Long After Midnight A riveting masterpiece of suspense. Linda Howard is a superbly original storyteller -- ReviewKaren Whitlaw's mother had been dead for only a few weeks when Karen received a package from a man she hardly knew- her father. Raw from the pain of her recent loss as well as the years of her father's abandonment, Karen puts the package and its papers away without reading them. Months later, Karen is called to New Orleans to identify the body of her father. He was murdered... and soon it becomes apparent that someone is after Karen as well. Detective Marc Chastain's first impression of Karen is negative. But he quickly discovers her apparent lack of feeling is due to the iron control she has over her emotions. Marc quickly revises his opinion of Karen- it's not that she doesn't care, it's that she cares too much. Marc's investigation of Karen's father's death brings the two together and Marc is determined to get to know the lady better. Kindle version. As I've posted recently, I am a huge Nora Roberts fans but since I've read just about everything she has written, and she only comes out with true "new" books a couple of times a year, I had to begin looking for other authors. Linda Howard is extremely good. I like that the first 3 chapters (I think it was) had no dialogue. It isn't easy to write (or read) text without dialogue; it requires real skill and this story is told with real skill. It has a different rhythm and doesn't labor points or discussions or descriptions. I've also been reading some of JD Robb recently and the "cop" talk can get old after the first couple of books. So it was refreshing to find an author who knows what's important to say and when to stop. I also liked that I had to concentrate to keep up because the story switches back and forth between groups of characters, which probably doesn't sound as interesting as it should, but it gives the impression of a swiftly moving story. As with every Kindle version, there are typographical errors. Very distracting. Very. It's like purchasing an expensive blouse, getting it home only to find out it has a pull you didn't notice. You feel cheated paying full price for damaged goods.

Although this is a three book series, each book can be read as a stand alone. It's a must read!.....As Karen Whitlaw was packing up the rest of her mother's things, she was astonished to learn that her long-lost father, Dexter Whitlaw had the audacity to send her a package with instructions to place it in safekeeping. Deserted by him years earlier including her own mother, Karen vowed never to speak to him again and if she was ever given the chance, she would tell him to go to hell but things were about to change when she received a certain phone call from New Orleans, Louisiana. Homicide Detective Marc Chastain of New Orleans, was not only known as a playboy on the force but mostly he had an uncanniness when it came to murder with a high approval rating of solving them. As he was investigating the death of a homeless man, his suspicions grew because nothing was what it appeared to be and through his probing, he not only discovered the man's identification, but noted that it was a professional hit. When he first met Karen Whitlaw, he wasn't sure if he liked her or not but all that changed when he saw her reaction at her father's funeral and he made up his mind right then and there to know her even more on a much personal level. Her first reaction to Marc was distaste but when Karen realized how supportive he was, she became utterly attracted to him causing her to go home with him where they shared a passionate night together. When Marc discovers the truth about another murder and the true identity of the second victim, attempts are made on Karen's life forcing the two of them to return to Ohio where Karen was from and find the package that Dexter sent to her in the mail for there lies the whole ugly truth. As the clues start mounting up between a certain book, corruption, a traitor, dirty politics and utter betrayal, they must race against the clock from a cold sadistic killer right behind them every step of the way who plans to kill them before they even get the chance to tell anyone!.....great book by Miss Howard.....I loved it.....thank you.....

I am an avid reader of Linda Howard. Her books have such alpha, yummy heroes and likable soft heroines in need of a knight in shining armor. Kill and Tell was a good romantic suspense story. It was a nice relaxing read for a rainy Sunday. I enjoyed reading about Marc, the hot detective in New Orleans. He was a protective strong moral man who once he decided he wanted the heroine went after her wholeheartedly. I liked Karen, the heroine. She was a strong, self sufficient heroine and seemed to keep a cool head in the face of danger. Their love story moves fast in that they fall for each other in a matter of days. That's ok with me. I don't mind fast relationships without a lot of misunderstandings. I liked the mystery of the story and kept guessing who the murderer was. I want to know more about John Medina, a supporting character who works for the CIA. His story should prove interesting! I did like all the history and description about New Orleans. It's all the more poignant since hurricane Katrina has been through New Orleans and this story was written before the hurricane hit. All in all, it was a good romantic suspense with likable hero and heroine, but pretty average. My fav Linda Howard books are Mr. Perfect, Dream Man, Open Season, and the Mackenzie series. This one was good but was missing that special Omgosh that was a great book that some of her other books have. Still a mediocre Linda Howard book is much better than the average romantic suspense.

Linda Howard writes a truly exceptional book. The characters are sexy and this is one of the most sexy hero's I have ever read. This is a book you will read and want to read again which I have done several times. The characters are memorable and smart as well as sexy. You can feel the heat of New Orleans and see the moss in the trees as you take a break from the real world to enjoy a walk on the wild side.
