The White Darkness: And Other Stories Of The Great Northwest

Synopsis

In "The White Darkness," by Lawrence Mott Heinemann, we have a welcome change from the ordinary novel. Mr. Mott evidently has a wide knowledge of the French-Canadian trappers and the Mounted Police. The stories depict the great hardships of their lives, yet through all there runs a vein of brightness and bonus camaraderie and of kindness to each other when in trouble. Some of the stories are full of pathos, as in that of "Jaquette" and "Light of a Match." The story of Black Dan in "The Current of Fear" relates how a bully was punished, but there is more light than shadow in the tales. About the author: Jordan Lawrence Mott IV (1881-1931), was an American novelist and writer on the outdoor life. His published works include Jules of the Great Heart: a free trapper and outlaw in the Hudson Bay region in the early days (1905), To the Credit of the Sea (1907), The White Darkness, and other stories of the Great North-West (1907), and Prairie, Snow and Sea (1910). He pioneered fishing for steelhead on the North Umpqua River, Oregon, and a bridge and a section of the North Umpqua Trail bear the name Mott in his memory. He established a fishing camp near Steamboat Creek. This book originally published by Outing Publishing Company in 1907 and may contain an occasional defect from the original publication or from the reformatting.
